may be described as a serie-comic sprightliness and naive simplicity -a humour which distinguishes Goldsmith's writings. The piece is also happily titled. Miss Wardeastle, knowing how bashful young Marlow is before ladies, stoops to the manners and condition of a barmaid, with whom he feels quite at his ease, and by this artifice she wins the man of her choice. It is said that the plot was suggested to Goldsmith in this way. When he was about sixteen years old, he set out one day for a pisce called Edgworthstown, and find ing night coming on when he had reached Ardegh, he saked a man "which was the best house in the town"-meaning the heat inn. The man, one Cornelius O'Kelley, a fencing master, pointed to the residence of Mr Raiph Fetherstone as being the best house in the vicinity. Oliver entered the and the trial proceeded: parlour, found the master of the manaion sitting over a good fire, and said he intended to pass the night there, and be would like to have suppor. Mr Fetherstone happened to know Goldsmith's, father, and, to humour the joke, pretended to be duty to lay before the jury would be as the landlord of "the public," nor did he several himself until next morning at breakfast, when Oliver called for his bill

As Miss: Hardcastle Mrs Bernard stooped to conquer (the audience) with success and effect. One great advantage enjoyed by Mrs Bernard in her representations on the stage is her apparently perfect confidence confidence is an ease, naturalness, and accuracy in her acting, which must be envied by other amateurs who have not graced the boards as often as Mrs Bornard, and who full house. Mrs Bernard also gets an excollent conception of the rôles in which shu plays, bringing out all the points and idiocrasics of the characters she is representing. Her withdrawal from the stage here, even for a sesson, will be a great loss to the Amatour Dramatic Corpt. On her first appoarance fast night, she was warmly welcomed by the Mhouse's nearly every stage of her acting elicited applause, and at the fall of the curtain several bouquets were thrown to her-a not too common compliment in Hongkong. The character of Tony Lumpkin was admirably represented by Mr Calthorpe. It is not an easy charactor to play. No large amount of histrionic ability is required to give an impersonation on the stage of an ordinary gentleman or lady, who is distinguished by few peculiarities, and has little to do beyond gracefully deporting himself or herself and giving utterance to some smartly written dialogue, but Tony Lumpkin is a character. requiring some careful study in itself, and a special aptitude on the part of the player. Although Tony is a coarse, ill behaved country bumpkin, with low tostes, yet the humour he throws into the play, and his good nature, always, render the role an extremely popular one if it is at all me last night. There was, however, no cleverer impersonation in the course of that was murder. Mr. Wilkinson gory by Mr Seakon. It was a small part, comparatively speaking, but Mr Scahom express or implied, was murder, malic exhibited in his little performance the ability of a first class low comedian. If . Mrs Bernardenay be said to have triumphed in the applause of the house, Mr Seahom may be said to have revelled in the law implied malice was when a man does laughter.

Mrs Chervau did not do justico to her histrionic powers as Mrs Hardcaelle. Once or twice she forgot a little of her dialogue, and a lack of spirit was occasionally noticeable, but probably the lady was suffering from indisposition. The lady understood her part, however, very well. Mrs Frazer was entrusted with a prominent part as Miss Neville, although the role of the "Baahful virgin, casting side-long looks of love " was not a difficult one to play. The part was very creditably performed throughout. Mr Newnham and Mr Bryan, , who both played so well a few months ago in "A lesson in love, did equally well last night as Hurdenstle and Charles Marlow respectively. The Dramatic Corps are fortunate in being able to draw upon the Regiment here for two such ring to the moint as to when a man was soexcellent amateur performers. His facellency having received this addross replied to it in terms of which the following is the substance:—Mr Fergusson and gentlemen.-It is very gratifying to me to receive this address from the residents of Ch. foo, which you have so kindly prasented to me on my arrival here, and notice with pleasure the moderation of its tono. It is just such an address as I could have wished to receive. You may depend to be upon my always doing all in my power to promote British interests in China, and I am sure you will remember that it is only by showing to the Chinese that their and witnesses than was done yesterday, the our interests are not antagonistic but are mutually advantageous, and that we are not working for our own prosperity alone, that we must try and get them to grass the same ideas regarding our interests that we ourselves entertain. Our line of conduct towards the Chinese should be to pull together with them, and to bear with them, and not to ty and force. mything on thein.

This is the best way by which we can hone to induce the Chinese to look favourably on our wishes. reat secret of success is patience. The

I am glad to hear your remarks that "inion that and conciliatory" views on all questions between Chinese and ourselves are monest the chief means of dealing successfully with such matters; and I am ing animated with feelings of impartiality and conciliation, which I am happy to say is. ciliatory one. This makes me hopeful of being able to assist you in furthering your interests, though I feel I may not be able as those of my predecessor, as I said the other day at Shandhal.

I-have already said that patience is necescary, and I trust that you will also ha e ationco with me, and that you will give me credit for always doing my best for our advantage, though I may not be able o attain this end as promptly as you might lesire: for you must be well aware that things do not always advance in China seconding to our ideas.

It may not be at once, and we must not xpect too great things; but if not in our iwn time, our successors may derive the benefit of the offerts.

I-thank you again very much for your kldress, as it is always agreeable to me in masing onward in my journey to Poking to receive the assurance that I have the full confidence of my fellow countrymen whose interests I represent and have at heart, and to meet from them such testimonials of their support.

Shortly afterwards His Excellency embarked on board the Vigilant, and left at 4 .m. for Taku, where the Kestrel will be in waiting to convey him to Tientain. - Sharehas ourier

THE CUTTING AND STEALING OF THE SHANGHAL RIVER CABLES. At the Mixed Court at Shanghai on the 2nd instant two Chinese fishermon who iad been captured near Kiutoan Beacon by native detective of the Municipal Police. vore charged with wilfully cutting and stealng portions of the telegraph cables laid in the river between Woosung and Gutzlaff. The detective found the two prisoners in me beat, and they had chisels and other implements in their possession for the purpose of cutting the vables; and they told him that other two boats, that had gone out to sen with eight fishermen, made it a rogular usiness to cut the eables. The prisoners idmitted having sold, about 20 picule of cable at $2.20 per picul. They sold the material to a man who lives in some town on the right bank of the Yangtage about 50 miles from Woosung. The detective went there and found that this man had about 200 ricula of telegraph cable in his shop, and that he used the copper wire, which is the very finest of c pper, and steel wire, for the manufacture of various articles, and he had been making a spleaded business of it. The reighent cutting of the cables has been the cause of great loss of business and heavy expense for repairs to both the Great Northern and the Eastern Extension Companies ... their lossess are estimated at Tla 20,000 or repairs alone during this year, besides the jost of business by frequent interruptions of the traffic Mr. Hais, who sat us Assessor at the Court to-day, said he would cominunicate with the Senior Consul in regard to the case, and the agents of the telegraph companies are to lay the matter before their Consuls—the one being an English and the other a Danish Company. The Tautai, we te ieve, will be requested to send a Chinese cunboat to the place where the cables have been taken nahore, and the 200 piculs of telegraph cables found in the shop referred to will be brought up to Shanghai, and other turties connected with the nefarious trade will be arrested. The two fisherm in in Court to-day were taken back to the police station to await further action in the matter. - We have been informed this afternoon that the Taotai has sent four of his men slong with the native detective of the Municipal Police to arre t others connected with this affair. The Great Northern Telegraph Com any has been on the track of these cable this ves for several mouths, and offered rewards for their was very amicable.
